37. Presumed Opportunistic: An Examination of the Personal and Professional Trappings of Public Sociology [Workshop/How to]
Thursday 3:30 pm-5:00 pm | BPP-Clarendon

The success of public sociology may come from below, but there are faculty and administrators who are evaluating our (public sociologists’) work and scholarship and deciding if our work warrants tenure, promotion, or counts as legitimate scholarly productivity. Principles of public sociology—such as working collaboratively, establishing non-extractive connections with immediate communities, making work accessible to the public, and using sociology to address inequalities—can be problematic for evaluators who are unfamiliar with Sociology as a discipline and even less familiar with public sociology and for administrators who relationships with local elites who are vested in the status quo. The degree to which our work deviates from established academic norms and challenges the local power elite, I argue renders public sociologists vulnerable to criticism, marginalization, delegitimation.

38. Teaching the Sociology of Climate Change [Workshop/How to]
Thursday 3:30 pm-5:00 pm | ONLINE ONLY Workshops

Organizer: Andrew Szasz, University of California, Santa Cruz
Presider: Andrew Szasz, University of California, Santa Cruz

We now understand that climate change is poised to become one of the greatest -- if not THE greatest -- issue for the future viability of global society. Certainly our current cohort of college students understand that; their concern and their fears are palpable and also reflected in opinion poll data. It is regrettable, but true, that we, as a profession, have lagged, have not kept up with the rapid growth of urgency about this threat. Interest in the environment, more generally, is still somewhat of a niche phenomenon in contemporary Sociology, and climate change garners only a small fraction of the attention that is devoted to society's interactions with nature. Nonetheless, there are signs of increasing interest. Climate is being taught in Intro classes (a bit), in Social Problems classes (maybe a bit more), and in Environmental Sociology classes (even more). One even hears of whole courses devoted to the Sociology of Climate Change. This workshop brings together faculty who already have experience teaching the sociology of climate change and faculty who are interested in doing so in future semesters.

63. Memoir as Sociological Analysis and Teaching Tool [Workshop/How to]
Friday | 10:15 am-11:45 am | BPP-Clarendon

Organizer: Danielle Currier, Randolph College
Using two recent memoirs written by sociologists Deb Cohan and Mindy Fried, participants in this session will examine and discuss the many ways memoirs are valuable teaching tools in a variety of Sociology courses, which may include Sociology of Sex/Gender, Family, Intimate Violence, Aging, Qualitative Methods, Work, and more. Both memoirs (Welcome To Whichever We Are, Caring for Red) grapple with issues of complex family histories as they impact broader issues around gendered family dynamics and issues of care. The authors will include a brief presentation about the power of engaging readers through personal life stories framed by a sociological context. Four panelists will discuss ways they have either used or plan to use - one or both books in their courses. Practical suggestions will be given for incorporating memoirs into coursework as well as how to use memoir writing as a learning strategy for students. Participants are encouraged to come with additional examples of using memoir in their teaching.

Discussants:
• Deborah Cohan, University of South Carolina
• Mindy Fried, Arbor Consulting Partners
• Cristina Barman, Central Connecticut State University
• Ashley Barr, State University of New York at Buffalo
• Danielle Currier, Randolph College
• Maria Paino, Oakland University

Discussants:

- Simone Kolysh, Hood College
- Davida Schiffer, University of Connecticut
- Aneesa Baboolal, University of Mass - Dartmouth

65. De-emphasizing Grades in Introduction to Sociology: Sharing a Simple “Choose Your Own Difficulty” design [Workshop/How to]
Friday │ 10:15 am-11:45 am │ ONLINE ONLY Workshops

Organizer: Matthew Manierre, Clarkson University
Pedagogical research has repeatedly found that traditional grading models often get in the way of student's learning. Rather than motivating students, they stifle creativity and risk taking, incentivizing students to simply say whatever they think the professor wants to hear. This is exacerbated by competition between courses that forces students to triage their energy and time, often leading to general education courses like introduction to sociology being low on their list of priorities. This workshop provides a simple and flexible course design that reduces student’s fixation on grades by allowing them to choose their own difficulty and corresponding workload. For example- a "master" difficulty student may need to pass 7 of 8 challenge opportunities throughout the semester, but they'll probably get an "/" in the course. Meanwhile, an "intermediate" difficulty selection means only turning in 5 challenge opportunities, getting a lower grade but freeing the student's time for their other courses without compromising their work in yours by spreading them too thinly. The use of multiple challenge opportunities throughout the semester open doors for creative assignments and opportunities to fill gaps in a textbook or lecture course. For instance: One challenge had students interview their family members about how their gender changed how they were raised. Another let students watch the film "Inside" by Bo Burnham via a Marxist lens, exploring how it articulates a sense of alienation and futurelessness under modern capitalism. Students were even challenged to make a children's story explaining the basics of intersectionality. Each of these challenges is graded on an accepted/not accepted basis, with rewrite opportunities if an assignment is needed. This frees the instructor to provide formative feedback and referrals to other resources because they no longer need to spend energy agonizing over rubrics or justifying why points were removed. Participants will come away with ideas about how to transition their course into a similar model, as well as an awareness of limitations. Course materials such as syllabi, challenge assignments, sample feedback to students, and student feedback on this course model will all be provided for attendees to guide their own decisions.

69. Talking Shop: The Illusion of Inclusion: [Talking Shop]
Friday | 12:00 pm-1:30 pm | BPP-Berkeley

The dialogue will be based on two case studies of youth-serving organizations in the Providence, Rhode Island area. Organization One is a branch of a well-funded national community/recreation center. This branch is running federally funded school-age programs in a majority BIPOC community. This agency has a complicated history with race and is actively working to rebuild connections and trust in the community, at-large. Organization Two is an extremely small, grassroots non-profit originally founded by undergraduate students from Brown University. It is using a combination of private municipal and state grants, as well as an individual giving program, to fund its academic and leadership programs for majority BIPOC and low-income high school students.

Friday 3:30 pm-5:00 pm I ONLINE ONLY Workshops

Organizers: Brooke Harrington, Dartmouth College; Leonard Seabrooke, Copenhagen Business School
From the era of Auguste Comte's early 19th century work on engineers, Sociology has been the disciplinary hub of research on professions and professionals. This session is for the diverse group of scholars and practitioners who have continued this work into the 21st century. The session will elicit diverse visions of the big questions in our field, as well as the practical challenges we face: such as bridging professions research across specialty silos (e.g., from medical sociology to economic sociology), obtaining research funding, and getting published. The goal of the session will be to share useful information and inspire collaborations or new research directions by bringing together a variety perspectives-including domestic and international, and from allied disciplines outside Sociology.

Organizers: Michele Lee Kozimor, Elizabethtown College; Barbara Prince, Lebanon Valley College

Presider: Michele Lee Kozimor, Elizabethtown College

Are you currently using innovative activities or pedagogy in the classroom? Have you thought about presenting such innovations at conferences or publishing the results of your assessments? Do you want to learn how to contribute to the scholarship of teaching and learning within the discipline of sociology? This workshop, led by the Editor and Deputy Editor of Teaching Sociology, will provide you with information on one key publication outlets for your work: Teaching Sociology (TS). In this workshop, we will discuss the differences in submission types, the materials that are published in TS, highlight the expectations for submissions, and provide opportunities for attendees to talk to others about their current projects. This workshop will be especially useful for meeting attendees who are presenting original work on pedagogy at the annual meeting.

156. Uncovering University Debt: Public Sociology How-To [Workshop/How to]
Saturday 3:30 pm-5:00 pm  I  UMB-2100
Organizer: Sofya Aptekar, CUNY School of Labor and Urban Studies
Presider: Sofya Aptekar, CUNY School of Labor and Urban Studies

In this workshop, we explain how institutional debt works and the ways it exacerbates racialized inequality in higher education. We present materials to use to research and expose institutional debt, as well as strategies to organize on your campus and connect to university debt work across institutions. These tools can be used in the classroom and to build solidarity between faculty, staff, and students, who are often pitted against each other by university administration, yet are all negatively affected by institutional debt. Institutional debt research provides an opportunity to explore the role of cultural schemas around debt and morality in shaping individual and collective behavior - as well as to develop alternative visions for reparative and democratic universities. This workshop builds on a series of institutional debt workshops organized by Labor Notes' Public Higher Education Workers and the Debt Collective (https://labornotes.org/events/2021/how-debt-robs-us-and-how-take-what-stolen-back-campus-workers-organizing-against-debt) and a workshop at ASA 2021, and draws on increasing recognition of institutional debt in movements against higher ed austerity (e.g. https://www.aaup.org/JAF12/making-invisible-visible-organizing-against-instructonally-harmful-antidemocratic-effects#.YcNcEIIOIPY, https://www.thenation.com/article/society/student-debt-university-credit/)
